Dear Dr. Hannah:

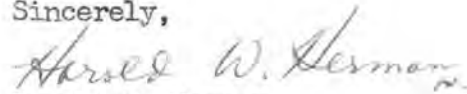

Many of us have seen newspaper accounts of the allegations made by a West Coast publication (Ramparts) regarding the work of Michigan State University in Vietnam from 1955 to 1962. I am not certain that as many college and university administrators may have had an opportunity to see the reply made by Michigan State University to these allegations, though I understand the Bulletin on International Education of the American Council on Education did publish the statement.

It has occurred to me that college and university administrators around the country may not have had an opportunity to see the Michigan State University report on this matter and I am wondering if it might be possible for College and University Business to have the complete statement as released by the university. It would be my hope that we could make use of this statement as an article for a forthcoming issue of College and University Business.

I shall look forward to hearing from you at your convenience.

With very best regards.

Sincerely,

Harold W. Herman

Dear Mr. Herman:

I am glad to send this copy of my statement on the Michigan State University project in Vietnam as you requested for such use as you care to make of it. We do not seek to prolong a painful controversy, but at the same time we are anxious that the educational world have access to the facts.

Thank you for your interest in this matter.

Sincerely,

President
