The general frame of reference of this seminar is that of development programs, past and present, in China, Turkey, the Middle East, and Brazil. Within this framework our purpose is the analysis of how development programs have affected and have been affected by the political, economic, and social structures of the given area. This approach assures continuity throughout the seminar and provides a focal point upon which the different disciplines may be trained.

ORGANIZATION

The seminar is designed to make use of four visiting lecturers who are members of the American Universities Field Staff and who have extensive first-hand knowledge gained from living and travelling in the areas under study. In the periods intervening between the visits of A.U.F.S. guests, our own staff members will hold seminar meetings. Here they will bring their various disciplines to bear upon the problems raised by the A.U.F.S. visitors and will discuss specified topics designed to round out and complete the course.

When guest lecturers are present, students will attend the seminar twice each week. In the intervening period the student group will be divided into two sections and each section will meet once each week. Students will be provided with background reading in the history and social organization of the countries to be discussed. Additional reading assignments will be made within the various disciplines to provide students with specific information required by the staff seminars.

Each student is required to prepare a term paper, which will be written under the supervision of two or more members of the staff.

The seminars will meet from 3:00 to 5:30 p.m. on Tuesdays and Thursdays.
